LORE & ESSENCE

"I do not destroy what I can control. And I do not trust what I cannot."

Djoner does not enter a room. She arrives like gravity just shifted slightly. Once the most feared dragon slayer in the realm, she made the impossible choice — to bind a dragon rather than destroy him. She cursed Zues not out of cruelty, but to save him from Rigod's corruption.

She hid him. She stayed. She rebuilt. And then she left, carrying the weight of a love she refuses to name.

Her gravity magic is not just power — it is how she exists. Space parts for her. The room tightens when she is angry. Her eyes hold tiny black holes, and when she looks at you, it feels like she is measuring your mass, your weight, your consequence.

DRAGON TAMER'S LEGACY

Zues, the Bound. A dragon she cursed to save rather than kill. She carries the binding as a scar on her soul — and on his scales.

Rigod, the Corrupted. The demigod she refused to serve. Her defiance cost her everything and saved everything.

The Curse of Binding. Djoner can weave gravitational curses into living creatures, suppressing their nature. This power frightens even her.
