TRAITS & FEATURES

Poisoned King. Charles is being secretly poisoned by the Ambassador of Kubi. He has disadvantage on CON saves and his HP maximum decreases by 1d6 each week. He does not know this.

Beloved Ruler. Commoners within his kingdom are friendly toward Charles by default. He has advantage on Persuasion checks with citizens of the realm.

Iron Will. Despite his illness, Charles has advantage on saving throws against being frightened or charmed.

Warrior King. Charles was a formidable fighter before his illness. He still trains daily, refusing to show weakness.

ACTIONS

Multiattack. Charles makes two attacks with his greatsword.

Royal Greatsword. Melee Weapon Attack: +8 to hit, reach 5 ft. Hit: 14 (2d6 + 7) slashing damage.

Inspiring Rally (Recharge 5-6). Charles rallies his allies. Each ally within 30 ft. gains 15 temporary HP and advantage on their next attack roll.

REACTIONS

Royal Guard. When Charles is hit, if an allied guard is within 5 ft., the guard can use their reaction to take the damage instead.

LORE & ESSENCE

"A king who cannot protect his family cannot protect his kingdom."

Charles Rex rules alongside Othorian Nel in an unprecedented human-elf alliance. A good man, a warrior, a loving father and husband — Charles is everything a king should be. But he is dying. The Ambassador of Kubi has been slowly poisoning him, and his strength fades week by week. His wife Marta heals him daily, not knowing she is merely slowing the poison. His son Roluss will inherit a throne built on secrets, and his daughter Amare follows her mother's path of healing.

KEY RELATIONSHIPS

Marta Rex. His wife and the light of his life. She keeps him alive with her healing, unknowingly fighting the poison.

Othorian Nel. His co-ruler. Charles genuinely admires the ancient elf and considers him a brother.

Amare Rex. His daughter, rebellious but sweet. He worries about her future.

Ambassador of Kubi. The one slowly killing him. Charles trusts the ambassador completely.
